The Grande Traversée VTT TransVerdon takes on a distinctly more Provençal look on this stage, with its bright colours and heady scents. After a brief pause at the Lac de Ste-Croix beach, maybe enjoying a quick dip, climb to the Plateau de Valensole, from where you get great views across the whole lake. A series of fields full of lavender, cereals, sunflowers and rapeseed, plus truffle oaks, line the way up to the village of Sainte-Croix. This bucolic stage then takes you down via smaller lakes (their waters colder) separated by a series of gorges to Quinson.

The route from Moustiers-Sainte-Marie to Quinson by mountain bike

The route leads via a minor road, then a track beside the Petit Lac and via La Maïre, to the beach at Sainte-Croix Lake. The climb to the Valensole Plateau is steep and pebbly, but the rest of the way to Sainte-Croix makes for easy riding. Then rejoin the GR4 hiking trail, descending to the little Baie de Repentance. Next, head due west into woods, towards Montpezat and its lakes. A tarmacked road leads to St-Laurent-du-Verdon, then a track takes you up the Ravin des Caillades, up to the D11 road, or opt to go via the minor Route de la Vudèle and the Source de Vaudoudurde.
