This alternative stage for leaving Angers goes via the dark blue slate mines southeast of the city centre on to the light blue waters of the Loire. The track through the disused slate mines at Trélazé is remarkably well laid out, crossing a former industrial landscape turned into a discovery park, with intriguing vistas, picnic areas, sports and leisure areas, a museum and an open-air craft display area.

Cycle route

To cross Angers and reach Trélazé you need to follow a mix of cycle tracks, bicycle lanes and roads. Then there's a clear track through the former slate mine. To cross the Authion River, you need to use the chain ferry. Carrying on from La Daguinière to St-Mathurin-sur-Loire, you follow quiet roads.

From Angers, follow the signs indicating Vers La Loire à Vélo par Trélazé. From La Daguinière use the Loire à Vélo signs to continue east.

Ferry

Take care as you need to operate the chain ferry over the Authion yourself and be aware that it is only operational from April to the start of November. When the ferry cannot be used, follow the signs for the alternative route.
