Canals & intimate rivers

The Scandibérique route leaves Blois along the Loire's south bank, going via vine-covered slopes to Candé-sur-Beuvron. The Beuvron River then becomes your thread until rejoining the regal Loire close to the perched Château de Chaumont-sur-Loire, surrounded by extraordinary gardens. Next, you ride past prestigious vineyards thriving beside the Loire. By now, you've entered beautiful Touraine, with its cliff-side caves and exceptional wineries, inciting you to stop for a tasting. The Château d'Amboise served as childhood home for major French Renaissance prince, the future François I; on becoming king, he called on Leonardo da Vinci to join his court, offering him the Clos Lucé as his home. This stage takes you to the heart of the French Renaissance.

The route

At Candé-sur-Beuvron, there is a steep slope. Just after Candé's bridge, join the path to the right that takes you alongside the Beuvron River. Via the Beuvron, rejoin the Loire going along the track laid out to Chaumont-sur-Loire. Except for a few slopes through vineyards, the crossing of the D751 road at Mosnes and the scenic descent towards Amboise, this stage along minor roads proves easy.

Surfacing smooth: just one stretch, between Madon and Chailles, had rather bad surfacing at time of writing, taking you along a rough path without asphalt, but with some potholes and big ruts. The rest of the way is on minor roads with good surfacing.

Link

From Amboise, you can reach the Château de Chenonceau via a 12km route.
