Canals & intimate rivers

From Bondy, the Scandibérique leads you boldly southwards along the Seine, through a mix of natural and industrial landscapes, offering a surprising way to cross Paris by bike! At the Rotonde de la Villette, you switch from following the Canal de l'Ourcq to riding beside the Canal St-Martin. Further southeast, the confluence of Seine and Marne Rivers is marked by the startling hotel complex Huatian Chinagora, built along the lines of Beijing's Forbidden City. Note the industrial heritage visible alongside the cycle path, many old factories converted to new uses: the Saint-Raphaël Factory has become an offshoot of the University of Paris VI, the Eaux de Paris waste-water works a depot for Paris's spare art works, while the former EDF Coal-fired Power Station, the Rhône-Poulenc Factory and the Hollander Factory are now home to a theatre company and artists' studios! Reaching Vitry-sur-Seine, admire the Pont du Port à l'Anglais, completed in 1928, replacing the former ferry that linked the banks of the Seine here. At Choisy-le-Roi, take in the old Choisy train station dating from the first half of the 19th century. Note that there's a 'service station' specifically for cyclists on the quays of Choisy's industrial port!

The route

In the county (département) of Val-de-Marne, the route follows the Seine, crossing the suburban towns/parishes of Charenton-le-Pont, Ivry-sur-Seine, Vitry-sur-Seine, Choisy-le-Roi, Orly, Villeneuve-le-Roi and Ablon-sur-Seine.

Entering the county of Essonne, the route alternates between east and west banks of the Seine. There are a number of green spaces along the way that make appealing stops, at the Port aux Cerises, Viry-Grigny's lakes, the Seine's banks at Ris-Orangis and Évry, and the sensitive natural space at Les Coudrays. Between these greener parts, you cross the more urban zones via cycle paths or roads with moderate traffic.

We recommend that you download the roadbooks and tracks for this stage to ensure you have a clear idea of the route, as signposting is not consistently in place along the way.

Surfacing smooth in parts: on the cycle paths and moderately busy roads through the more urban areas, with a mix of concrete and asphalt.

Surfacing rough in parts: crossing L'Île de Loisirs at the Port aux Cerises and by the Viry-Grigny Lakes and the Espace Naturel Sensible des Coudrays, the route is along limestone paths that aren't easy to tackle on a road bike.
