In forest

From Pontpoint, crossing Halatte Forest, the little royal city of Senlis lies just a short ride away. Between the village of Villemétrie and the border with the Ile-de-France Region (encompassing Paris and the counties surrounding it), you feel a world away from the sprawling capital. The wooded route resembles France's largest forest, Les Landes, in southwest France. Pines, heather and wide sandy stretches feature, the last encouraging the creation of one of the county of Oise's leading theme parks, La Mer de Sable. To explore it, as well as Chaalis Royal Abbey, the Musée Jacquemart André and the Jean-Jacques Rousseau Park, you'll need to leave the woods behind!

The route

You alternate between minor roads and wide forest paths. Note the steep little slope after Pontpoint Church to reach the forest. From Le Moncel Royal Abbey at Pont-Sainte-Maxence, the way is shared with the Avenue Verte London-Paris cycle route up to Senlis. Then there is specific signposting in place for the EV3 up to Ver-sur-Launette. South of Senlis, at time of writing a deviation had been put in place to avoid an army firing range – follow the signposts.

Surfacing in parts smooth, in parts rough: compacted tracks and asphalt. There are a few stretches on rough farm tracks.
